ELECTRIC TRAP FOR COCKROACHES TICKLED FEET

Defective, as It Warned Them of Fate, Is Claim in Suit.

ROCHESTER, July 11. A device for the electrocution of cockroaches was the subject of much controversy in City Court here, when George D. Foreyth, an attorney, appeared as his own counsel in an action against the Triangle Tool and Die Company, charging breach of contract in the manufacture of the contrivance invented by him.

Two of the devices were in court. It was alleged one of them was defective because the roach was warned of danger by a tickling sensation in his front feet when he toucked the live metal. The roach, according to the specifications of the invention, was to have been induced to walk on the metal by quantities of celery juice placed at convenient spots. Decision was reserved.
